Work History

January 2010 - Present

Software Developer, Hamstrad, London

Working for this large provider of IT systems and software as a software developer it was my job to work on the final stages of software, so once a concept piece had been made and gone through initial testing, I would further test it for flaws and compliance. Then I would improve on the user interface of the software and make general improvements. I would then sign the piece off for testing by the client once I was happy with it.

January 2008- January 2010

Software Developer, Manchester Council, Manchester.

I worked for the council in Manchester providing them with software and systems to use in the offices and on their websites such as client services. I would have to have a briefing with the chiefs to find out what they required from software, and then discuss that with my team to figure out the best way of providing it in the most cost effective manner possible. Then once we had created the software it would be given to a dedicated team of testers to check it for compliance and suitability.

January 2007 – January 2008

Software Developer, EEDOS Games, London.

Working for a large games company as a software developer saw me overseeing the Movie to Game sector, where we would be tasked with turning a movie into a game platform. We would liaise with the producers of the film, find directives and missions for the game, and build the basic version before sending it on for further testing and quality addition.
