Work History

January 2010 - Present

Web Designer, Freelance, London

As a freelance Web Designer it was my duty to actively seek clients requiring web design services. I achieved this through advertising and also actively scanning websites that looked a little dated and offering my services. I would then meet with the client in person or via Skype or Phone, and discuss the project with them. I would then create a template for them to look at, and insert their content into that if they were happy with it.

January 2008- January 2010

Web Designer, Web Wide World, London.

As a web designer in this busy office it was my duty to create front pages for client's web sites. I would look at the existing layout and see where improvements and upgrades could be made, and then design a page to show the client, so that if they liked it, I could pass it to the continuation team to complete the rest of the site.

January 2007 – January 2008

Web Designer, Blue Communications, London.

As a web designer for a large Mobile Phone and Broadband provider I was kept busy with ever changing web content to create. It would mostly be updating of prices and information, although occasionally new products, services and promotions would see me creating a page from scratch.
