Work History

January 2010 - Present

Web Developer, Sea Entertainment, London

As a web developer for a large entertainment services company I had to program and code sites from scratch, this would usually incorporate upgrading item to newer versions to retain compatibility with browser upgrades etc. I would also be responsible for managing the implementation of new pages onto the server for publishing.

January 2008- January 2010

Web Developer, Web Wide World, London.

As a web developer in this busy office it was my duty to take the pages from the designers who would have created the 'look' of the site, and make them work with all the various programs and technical bits that would be required, such as adding chat features and checkout options, as well as pop up suggestions. I would then have to translate the design into code and run compliance testing to make sure that everything worked as intended, before overseeing the upload to the server and going live with the page.

January 2007 – January 2008

Web Developer, Blue Communications, London.

As a web developer for a large Mobile Phone and Broadband provider I was in charge of keeping the business pages up to date with the latest content add ons and modifications. I also provided infrastructure support so where there were problems it was my duty to investigate where these were occurring and make sure they were fixed in a timely manner.
