Work History

January 2010 - Present

Process Engineer, Hissan Car Plant, London

Working in this large manufacturing environment it was my duty to assess whether any improvements could be made to the processes in place to improve the efficiency or cost effectiveness of the plant. I would then submit ideas to improve the process to the plant manager who would then decide whether or not to implement the new process, and it was then my duty to assist in the implementation.

January 2008- January 2010

Process Engineer, Adams Offices, London.

As a Process Engineer in this large office refurbishment business it was my duty to design the set processes that the builders followed to ensure that builds were completed to the highest standard and completed on time and on budget. If there were any problems with my process then I would have to remake them.

January 2007 – January 2008

Process Engineer, Carries Canning, London

Working for this canned goods production factory it was my job to invent and develop new processes to try and maintain time and cost efficiency in an ever competitive business. It would then be my responsibility to advise all staff of the changes to the processes and ensure that they embraced them, and then implement them across the business for wide scale adoption of the new technique. I would have to monitor the technique for 6 months to ensure it was suitable.
